

Communication Graduate Student Research Fund

There is a general funding pool to support graduate student research broadly, covering any topic and every type from exploratory projects to theses and dissertations. The graduate committee will consider funding research that leads to a publishable article, thesis, or dissertation but will not consider funding research that terminates in a course assignment.

Requests for support should include:

- (a) A description of the research project and a statement regarding its significance;
- (b) An itemized budget [not to exceed $400]; and
- (c) A statement on how the work advances your research agenda (e.g., thesis, conference paper, publication).

Submit a hard copy to the Graduate Program Coordinator.

Requests will be considered three times a year:

- (a) November 1
- (b) February 1
- (c) May 1

In an effort to use our limited funds wisely, and to ensure that all grad students have equal access to these funds, we will limit students to no more than 1 award per academic year.

In 2009-10, there will be $2500 for graduate student research available from the Communication Graduate Student Research Fund.
