This program offers undergraduates a robust living-and-learning experience in León, a medium-sized city in northern Spain. You will advance your knowledge of Spanish, practice cross-cultural communication, increase your tolerance for ambiguity, strengthen your resourcefulness and gain experience in adapting to cultural differences. You will accomplish these goals through a range of academic and nonacademic experiences. You will live with local families, conduct research in León, interview Spanish colleagues, and draw upon local resources for group projects. You will go on field trips to other Spanish towns and cities, read and write travel essays, create blog posts, and practice writing to learn. The Communication course satisfies the Department’s methods requirement. The English course can be taken for “W” credit.
